

1 Jeffrey L. Kessler (admitted pro hac vice) jkessler@winston.com

2 David G. Feher (admitted pro hac vice) dfeher@winston.com

3 WINSTON & STRAWN LLP

200 Park Avenue
New York, New York 10166
Telephone: (212) 294- 6700
Facsimile: (212) 294-4700

6 Cardelle B. Spangler (admitted pro hac vice) cspangler@winston.com

7 WINSTON & STRAWN LLP

35 West Wacker Drive
Chicago, Illinois 60601
Telephone: (312) 558-5600
Facsimile: (312) 558-5700

10 Diana Hughes Leiden (SBN: 267606)
dhleiden@winston.com

11 WINSTON & STRAWN LLP

333 South Grand Avenue, 38th Floor
Los Angeles, CA 90071-1543
Telephone: (213) 615-1700
Facsimile: (213) 615-1750

14 Jeanifer E. Parsigian (SBN: 289001)
jparsigian@winston.com

15 WINSTON & STRAWN LLP

101 California St., 35th Floor
San Francisco, California 94111
Telephone: (415) 591-1000
Facsimile: (415) 591-1400

18 Attorneys for Plaintiffs

19 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

20 CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA -WESTERN DIVISION

22 ALEX MORGAN, et al.,

23 Plaintiffs/Claimants,

24 v.

25 UNITED STATES SOCCER
26 FEDERATION, INC.,

27 Defendant/Respondent.

Case No. 2:19-cv-01717-RGK-AGR

Assigned to: Judge R. Gary Klausner

REPLY IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

Date: October 21, 2019

Time: 9:00AM

Place: Courtroom 850

I. INTRODUCTION

Having already conceded that “the primary issues to be litigated ... are nearly identical” for each class member (Dkt. 54 at 4 (emphasis added)), the United States Soccer Federation (“USSF”) does not even contest conditional certification of this case as a collective action under the Equal Pay Act (Dkt. 67 at 2, n.1), and makes only the most perfunctory effort to argue that the requirements of Rule 23 have not been met. Instead, it primarily devotes its class opposition to an utterly frivolous “standing” argument against the four class representatives based on the illogical proposition that a female soccer player does not suffer any injury from a discriminatory compensation policy in favor of the male soccer players so long as she can achieve an equal amount of total compensation by playing in many more games and being far more successful in those games than her male counterparts have been. This type of argument—based on a comparison of “total remuneration” where there are discriminatory rates of pay—has been squarely rejected “[a]s a matter of common sense” because it would lead to an “absurd result.” Ebbert v. Nassau Cnty., 2009 WL 935812, at *3 (E.D.N.Y. 2009). As explained by the court in Ebbert:

[T]otal remuneration cannot be the proper point of comparison [because i]f it were, an employer who pays a woman $10 per hour and a man $20 per hour would not violate the EPA ... as long as the woman negated the obvious disparity by working twice as many hours.”

Id. (emphasis added). This would be an “absurd result” that “Congress could [not] have intended.” Id.

It is precisely this absurd result that the USSF advocates for as the basis for its “standing” argument against the class representatives. Over the class period, the WNT has played far more games than the MNT and amassed a far higher win percentage, including earning two World Cup championships. See Declaration of Rebecca Roux (“Roux Decl.”) ¶ 3. This is the only reason why the four WNT class representatives were able to earn more total compensation than members of the MNT—they worked in

1 far more games, had far greater success and thus were able to earn more money in salary
2 and bonuses even under the indisputably discriminatory set of the USSF's
3 compensation policies. This is not equal pay under either Title VII or the Equal Pay
4 Act, both of which require equal pay for equal work.

5 Under the correct equal pay standard that requires that male and female
6 employees be compensated at an equal rate of pay for the same work, Bence v Detroit
7 Health Corp., 712 F.2d 1024, 1027–28 (6th Cir. 1983), all of the WNT players, 8 including the four proposed class representatives, have suffered a concrete economic 9 injury as they would have earned millions more had they been paid in accordance with 10 the terms of the men's compensation policy. See Roux Decl. ¶ 4. This clear economic 11 injury to each of the class representatives from the USSF's gender pay discrimination 12 will be proven at trial and unquestionably provides them with Article III standing as 13 well as a common interest with the rest of the class to aggressively pursue these claims.

14 Equally frivolous is the USSF's position that the more than 50 putative class
15 members are not sufficiently "numerous" and should instead be required to join together
16 in fifty separate individual actions. Rule 23 does not require such an inefficient result,
17 which would eviscerate the very judicial economy it is designed to provide and cause
18 this Court to exchange an efficient class action trial of five to seven days presenting 19 common issues for an unruly consolidated trial of fifty separate claims lasting months 20 in which the players would each have to present their individual claims over and over 21 again despite their overwhelming commonality. Nor are there any demonstrated 22 conflicts among the class members or class representatives that would render the far 23 more efficient procedures of a Rule 23 certification unavailable in this case.

24 Finally, the USSF's arguments against the Rule 23(b) certification requirements
25 are equally misguided. Plaintiffs are seeking injunctive relief requiring at least equal 26 terms and conditions of employment with the MNT on a common basis for all of the 27 players on the WNT—exactly the type of common remedy against a common 28 employment policy warranting a Rule 23(b)(2) certification. Similarly, Plaintiffs have

1 shown that common issues predominate regarding their liability and damages claims
2 and that they satisfy all Rule 23(b)(3) certification requirements.

3 II. ARGUMENT

4 A. Under the legally relevant equal “pay rate” standard, the class 5 representatives have suffered injuries in fact conferring Article III 6 standing.

7 While the USSF’s argument regarding standing is nothing more than a disguised
8 merits challenge on the common question of its gender discrimination, Plaintiffs have 9 shown that Alex Morgan, Megan Rapinoe, Carli Lloyd, and Becky Sauerbrunn each
10 suffered injury conferring them with Article III standing to pursue Title VII and Equal
11 Pay Act claims individually and on behalf of the class. See Munoz v. 7-Eleven, Inc., 12 2018 WL 5880076, at *3 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 18, 2018) (“[I]n a class action, standing is 13 satisfied if at least one named plaintiff meets the requirements’ of Article III.”). Their 14 injuries are tangible, directly traceable to the USSF’s discriminatory compensation
15 policies, and can be redressed by this Court. See id.

16 The USSF’s argument to the contrary ignores the applicable legal standard
17 governing EPA and Title VII claims, which looks to whether there is an equal pay rate
18 for different genders as being dispositive, not the total compensation. See Bence, 712
19 F.2d at 1027–28; EEOC v. Kettler Bros. Inc., 846 F.2d 70, 1988 WL 41053, at *3 (4th
20 Cir. 1988) (unpublished) (applying Bence to Title VII and EPA claims and holding that 21 the effective pay rate, not the total amount of compensation is the appropriate 22 comparator); Ebbert, 2009 WL 935812, at *3 (same). The USSF’s claim that the four 23 class representatives have not suffered any injury to confer standing is based on the 24 illogical and “absurd” claim that a discriminatory pay rate does not cause injury so long
25 as the women being discriminated against work much more and achieve better results
26 to earn a comparable amount of pay. See Ebbert, 2009 WL 935812, at *3. The USSF
27 has not cited a single case that has accepted such an argument, and with good reason.
28 It would render the Equal Pay Act and Title VII a nullity if discriminatory pay rates could be defended on the ground that the victims of the discrimination could just work more and perform better in order to achieve the same total compensation as their favored counterparts.

Applying the correct legal standards for rate of pay discrimination, it is evident that the total compensation comparisons presented by the USSF are meaningless. See Bence, 712 F.2d at 1027–28. The figures the USSF cynically compares include total pay of selected players on the MNT and WNT, irrespective of number and outcome of games played (including the fact that the WNT won two World Cup championships during this period while the MNT did not even qualify for the most recent one). As described in the Roux Declaration, the WNT played far more games, with much greater success, during this period, which is the only reason why the four proposed class representatives were able to earn a higher total compensation than the men they have been compared to on the MNT. See Roux Decl. ¶¶ 3–4.

The correct injury analysis is whether the plaintiffs would have earned more compensation under the pay rate policy of the MNT than they actually received under the pay rate policy of the WNT. And the undeniable answer, shown below for the four proposed class representatives, is yes¹, as each of them would have earned at least $2.5 million more over the same period had they been compensated under the MNT policy.

Comparison of WNT Players' Pay Under WNT Rate Versus Under MNT Rate from March 30, 2014 Through October 7, 2019
Player	Pay Under WNT Rate	Pay Under MNT Rate
Alex Morgan	$ 1,201,449.64	$ 4,104,920.65
Megan Rapinoe	$ 1,159,099.64	$ 3,722,625.00
Carli Lloyd	$ 1,204,049.64	$ 4,168,420.65

¹ Plaintiffs already demonstrated in their motion for class certification that the WNT and MNT each have common, but discriminatory, pay policies, set forth in separate CBAs with the USSF that apply to all members of the WNT and MNT members respectively. Dkt. 64 at 3–5.

1	Becky Sauerbrunn	$ 1,188,249.64	$ 4,172,670.65
---	------------------	-----------------	-----------------

2 Roux Decl. ¶ 4. These are calculable, concrete, and certain injuries that stem from the 3 USSF's discriminatory policies.²

4 The USSF's standing authorities are of no help to them because in those cases,
5 unlike the situation here, the proposed class representatives were not subject to the 6 common policy being challenged by the class. See Hoffman v. Blattner, 315 F.R.D.
7 324, 333 (C.D. Cal. 2016) (plaintiff lacked standing to challenge policy for on-duty
8 meal breaks because all his meal breaks were off-duty); Young v. Covington & Burling
9 L.L.P., 740 F. Supp. 2d 17, 22 (D.D.C. 2010) (plaintiff applied for staff attorney job, so 10 was not impacted by an allegedly racially discriminatory policy in hiring associate 11 attorneys). In this case, the four proposed class representative have each been subject 12 to the exact same discriminatory pay policies as the rest of the class.

13 Perhaps the most egregious standing argument the USSF has put forward is its 14 comparison including the compensation that the four class members earned for working 15 at a second independent job for a team in the NWSL. Dkt. 67 at 3–4. The notion that a 16 woman has to work two jobs to have a chance to make what a male earns at a single job
17 is not only legally wrong under Title VII and the Equal Pay Act, it is morally repugnant.
18 MNT players, of course, also play for individual teams in professional leagues, but the 19 USSF excludes any compensation the men receive from the comparison. There is 20 simply no colorable basis for the USSF arguing that the class representatives have no
21 injury standing because they also get paid for working a second job for an NWSL team.
22 See Declaration of Alex Morgan (“Morgan Decl.”) ¶ 4; Declaration of Carli Lloyd
23 (“Lloyd Decl.”) ¶ 4.

24 Finally, there is no merit to the USSF's argument that the class representatives
25 lack standing to pursue an injunction. The only requirement for injunctive relief
26

27 ² At trial, Plaintiffs will present separate expert testimony calculating the damages 28 suffered by the class as a whole, along with a common methodology for determining the amount of damages suffered by each class member.

standing is that there be a “sufficient likelihood that [plaintiffs] will again be wronged in a similar way” in the future. Bates v. United Parcel Serv., Inc., 511 F.3d 974, 985 (9th Cir. 2007). Here, each of the class representatives will continue to be subject to the USSF’s discriminatory policies unless an injunction is entered to end this unlawful behavior. This includes not only the USSF’s discriminatory rate of pay policies, but also the USSF’s continued imposition of discriminatory working conditions regarding travel, hotels, selection of turf, marketing and medical care to which a number of players have already attested. See Dkts. 64-18 at 2–5, 64-20 ¶¶ 12–19, 64-22 ¶¶ 12–19; see also Morgan Decl. ¶ 3; Lloyd Decl. ¶ 3. All of this discriminatory treatment has injured the proposed class representatives, who have standing to seek an injunction against the USSF from continuing such discriminatory working conditions against the class.

B. Plaintiffs meet the Rule 23(a) requirements.

1. Numerosity is satisfied.

The USSF does not dispute that a class of approximately 50 persons has been found to meet the numerosity requirement of Rule 23(a). In re Banc of California Sec. Litig., 326 F.R.D. 640, 646 (C.D. Cal. May 31, 2018) (“It’s generally accepted that when a proposed class has at least forty members, joinder is presumptively impracticable based on numbers alone.”) (citing 1 William B. Rubenstein, Newberg on Class Actions § 3:12 (5th ed.)). Instead, the USSF argues that this Court should not follow those cases because it claims it is possible to ask each putative class member to join the action to pursue her individual claim. Dkt. 67 at 12. But this argument ignores the burden and inefficiency that the joinder of 50 different plaintiffs or more to pursue individual claims would impose on the litigants and this Court, making such joinder of claims impractical.

Proceeding through a joinder of all individual claims (assuming it were possible) would expand a five to seven-day trial of class claims into a months-long affair in which each individual past, current, and future WNT member would have to testify about overlapping facts to prove individual claims. Indeed, this is why classes with over forty

1 members “are usually found to have satisfied the numerosity requirement,” reflecting
 2 the judicial common sense that joinder of so many plaintiffs renders litigation and trials
 3 unmanageable. See Jensen v. SECORP Indus., 2018 WL 5961287, at *2 (C.D. Cal.
 4 Aug. 23, 2018). Even if joining all these additional plaintiffs might be possible, this 5 would not defeat a numerosity determination where “it would be difficult and 6 inconvenient to manage a case with so many plaintiffs, especially . . . [where] the 7 primary legal issue facing all putative class members is the same.” Id.

8 The USSF’s assertion that the Equal Pay Act collective action weighs against 9 Rule 23 class certification is unsupported. Numerous cases have certified both Rule 23
 10 and FLSA classes. See, e.g., Ernst v. ZogSports Holdings LLC, 2019 WL 1435933, at 11 *7 (C.D. Cal. Feb. 21, 2019); Webb v. Alpha & Omega Servs. Inc., at 2016 WL
 12 9110160, at *7 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 14, 2016). Indeed, the USSF does not cite a single case
 13 finding that the possibility of opting into a collective action is a ground for defeating 14 Rule 23 certification for Title VII claims, which provide for injunctive relief, as well as 15 categories of damages, not available in an Equal Pay collective action. The need for 16 common injunctive relief for all WNT players under Title VII is another reason why 17 numerosity has been satisfied.

18 2. The proposed class representatives are adequate.

19 The Court should have no doubts about the “adequacy” of the four proposed class 20 representatives, as they have already shown that they are ready, willing, and able to 21 “vigorously represent the interests” of the classes. Dkts. 64–18 at ¶ 26, 64–20 at ¶ 26,
 22 64–22 at ¶ 26, and 64–24 at ¶ 26; see also White v. Nat’l Collegiate Athletic Ass’n, 2006
 23 WL 8066803, at *3 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 19, 2006). In contrast to these athletes’ attestations 24 and demonstrated commitment over years of fighting this discrimination for the entire 25 team through an EEOC complaint and this litigation, the USSF’s unsupported
 26 speculation that the class representatives “may prioritize monetary and injunctive relief 27 that is more favorable to them than to junior, non-contracted players” (Dkt. 67 at 14) is 28 entitled to no weight. See In re Nat’l Collegiate Athletic Ass’n Athletic Grant-In-Aid

1 Cap Antitrust Litig., 311 F.R.D. 532, 541 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (“[T]he mere potential for a 2 conflict of interest is not sufficient ... the conflict must be actual, not hypothetical.”).

3 Indeed, courts have rejected virtually identical arguments that a class of athletes
4 at different seniority levels will have inherent conflicts even in a sport, like professional
5 football, where the players earn vastly different amounts of money. See White v. Nat'l
6 Football League, 822 F. Supp. 1389, 1405 (D. Minn. 1993). The reason is that there,
7 as here, the defendant “imposed various rules in [a] substantially identical manner to all
8 players” such that “no matter what level of seniority, all class members shared a 9 common interest in the form and substance of the [] player rules.” Id. at 1405–06. See
10 also White, 2006 WL 8066803, at *3 (certifying class over argument that varied quality 11 of athletic skill among class members creates “an inherent conflict of interest”).

12 Nor can the USSF defeat the proposed class by speculating that some contract
13 players might prefer the current unlawful discrimination. Such a hypothetical 14 possibility that some putative class members might prefer the status quo exists in 15 virtually every case and does not prove an actual conflict supporting the denial of class
16 certification. See, e.g. Cooper v. IBM Pers. Pension Plan, 2001 WL 36412295 at *5
17 (S.D. Ill. Sept. 17, 2001) (“While [it] may theoretically be true in every large class action 18 [that some class members prefer the status quo], it does not prevent class certification”); 19 Lanner v. Wimmer, 662 F.2d 1349, 1357 (10th Cir. 1981) (holding that a class can be 20 certified even “if some members of the class might prefer to not have violations of their 21 rights remedied”). Moreover, all the current WNT contracted players are named
22 plaintiffs in this lawsuit, devastating the USSF’s unfounded conjuncture that they do 23 not support the relief sought in this litigation.

24 What is most important, and clearly established here, for the purpose of assessing 25 adequacy is that the proposed class representatives suffered the same injury as all other 26 class members because they all were subject to the same discriminatory rate of pay and 27 working conditions policies of the USSF. See Byrne v. Santa Barbara Hospital, 2017
28 WL 5035366, at *7 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 30, 2017) (finding adequacy requirement satisfied

1 where class representatives “all suffered the same injury” as putative class members).

2 C. Plaintiffs meet Rule 23(b) requirements.

3 1. Plaintiffs’ injunctive class satisfies Rule 23(b)(2).

4 Plaintiffs’ seek to “end [] USSF’s discriminatory practices” going forward. Dkt.
 5 1, ¶ 5, Prayer for Relief. This is quintessential injunctive relief warranting Rule 23(b)(2)
 6 certification. Velez v. Novartis Pharmaceutical Co., 244 F.R.D. 243, 271 (S.D.N.Y.
 7 2007) (certifying a class of women alleging gender discrimination under Rule 23(b)(2) 8 where the plaintiffs “[sought] seek to reform defendants’ practices to provide for 9 equitable employment opportunities and compensation for women.”) (emphasis 10 added). The USSF’s opposition, made without any legal support, seems to be that 11 because the injunction would have monetary value, it is equivalent to damages relief
 12 and thus cannot be pursued through an injunctive class. This makes no sense. All 13 injunctions have quantifiable value, yet Rule 23(b)(2) provides a specific, and different, 14 mechanism for certification of an injunctive relief class.

15 Plaintiffs are not seeking relief in the form of back pay for the Rule 23(b)(2) class.
 16 It is separately seeking certification of a Rule 23(b)(3) damages class to pursue that 17 relief. Courts, including in Ellis which the USSF cites in this portion of its opposition, 18 have endorsed this approach. See, e.g., Ellis v. Costco, 285 F.R.D. 492, 545 (N.D. Cal.
 19 2012) (certifying Rule 23(b)(2) and Rule 23(b)(3) classes in a Title VII gender 20 discrimination case).

21 2. Plaintiffs’ damages class satisfies Rule 23(b)(3).

22 The USSF’s claim that individualized inquiries predominate is quickly disposed 23 of in a case like this, where the plaintiffs are challenging a common policy of 24 discriminatory treatment applied to all class members. By proving that MNT players
 25 are uniformly paid under a CBA policy that provides for a higher pay rate than the pay
 26 rate applied to all WNT players, Plaintiffs will be able to show discrimination in a 27 “single stroke, [that] would apply validly throughout the class.” Baughman v.
 28 Roadrunner Commc’ns, 2014 WL 4259468, at *7 (D. Ariz. Aug. 29, 2014). This

1 common issue predominates and warrants class certification under Rule 23(b)(3).

2 Indeed, the USSF previously conceded that the claims of all WNT players are 3 “substantially similar” and that “the primary issues to be litigated ... are nearly 4 identical” in its motion to transfer this case to join it with the claims of an absent class
 5 member. Dkt. 54 at 4. This prior statement belies its contrary claim now and cannot 6 be reconciled by arguing that they were made in “a different context.” Dkt. 67 at 18.
 7 No matter what the context, there is only one set of true facts and the facts here are that 8 the claims of all class members are commonly directed at the same uniform and 9 discriminatory policies.

10 Incredibly, the USSF asserts, without any explanation, that the WNT Plaintiffs 11 lack a “common formula” to “compar[e] individual WNT players and individual MNT
 12 players.” Dkt. 67 at 18. It knows, however, that the two CBAs provide just such a 13 formula, as the compensation policies in the MNT CBA applied to all of the players on 14 that team, and the common policy of the WNT CBAs applied to all class members.
 15 These uniform employer policies provide a well-established basis for an expert to apply
 16 a common formula to assess class-wide injury and damages. See, e.g., Kamar v. Radio 17 Shack Corp., 254 F.R.D. 387, 399 (C.D. Cal. 2008) (Certification is “usually 18 appropriate where liability turns on an employer’s uniform policy that is uniformly
 19 implemented, since in that situation predominance is easily established.”). While each 20 class member’s damages will differ based on the number of games played and results,
 21 they will be proven through a common expert methodology based on the uniform
 22 compensation policies applied to the WNT and MNT, which is all that Rule 23(b)(3)’s
 23 predominance test requires. See Negrete v. Allianz Life Ins. Co. of N. Am., 238 F.R.D.
 24 482, 484 (C.D. Cal. 2006).

25 III. CONCLUSION

26 The USSF has not set forth any valid basis for denying Plaintiffs’ request that 27 this Court certify the proposed classes under Rule 23(b)(2) and Rule 23(b)(3) and the 28 conditional collective action under FLSA Section 216(b).

1 Dated: October 8, 2019*

WINSTON & STRAWN LLP

2 By: /s/ Jeffrey L. Kessler

3 Jeffrey L. Kessler

4 David G. Feher

Cardelle B. Spangler

Diana Hughes Leiden

Jeanifer E. Parsigian

Attorneys for Plaintiffs

6
7 Refiled per Order (Dkt. 74) to remedy a spacing issue.*